A150341

Karin Johana Immergut, Judge.

Argued and submitted on May 08, 2013.

J. Randolph Pickett argued the case for appellants. With him on the briefs were R. Brendan Dummigan, Kristen West, Kimberly O. Weingart, and Pickett Dummigan LLP.

Jonathan Henderson argued the cause for respondent. With him on the brief were Nicole M. Rhoades, Daniel S. Hasson, and Davis Rothwell Earle & Xochihua, P. C.

Before Nakamoto, Presiding Judge, and Egan, Judge, and Lagesen, Judge.*

LAGESEN, J.

Affirmed.

Egan, J., dissenting.

1 LAGESEN, J.

2 Carroll Mayfield went on a drinking binge, which included a stop at the 3 Eagles Lodge #2151 Gresham. There, he was served whiskey and beer over the course of 4 several hours. Mayfield later visited the Gresham Players Club, where he shot and 5 injured plaintiffs Jason Chapman and Richard Gilbertson. Plaintiffs sued Mayfield, the 6 Eagles Lodge, the Gresham Players Club, and Mayfield's friend Grant Baughman, 7 asserting claims for common-law negligence and seeking damages resulting from the 8 shooting. With respect to the Eagles Lodge (hereinafter "defendant"<sup>1</sup>), plaintiffs alleged 9 that defendant negligently served Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated, leading to 10 the shooting. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendant on the ground that 11 plaintiffs had not presented evidence sufficient to create a factual dispute as to whether 12 Mayfield's act of shooting plaintiffs was the foreseeable result of defendant's act of 13 serving alcohol to Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated. We affirm.

14 On review of a trial court's grant of summary judgment, "we view the 15 evidence and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from the evidence in the light 16 most favorable to * * * the party opposing the motion." Jones v. General Motors Corp., 17 325 Or 404, 408, 939 P2d 608 (1997). Summary judgment is proper only "if there is no 18 genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of 19 law." Outdoor Media Dimensions Inc. v. State of Oregon, 331 Or 634, 638, 20 P3d 180 20 (2001) (citing ORCP 47 C). "A genuine issue of material fact is lacking when 'no

1 objectively reasonable juror could return a verdict for the adverse party on the matter that 2 is the subject of the motion for summary judgment.'" Id. at 638-39 (quoting ORCP 47
3 C). Because plaintiffs would have had the burden of proof at trial, to withstand 4 defendant's motion for summary judgment, plaintiffs had the burden of producing 5 admissible evidence establishing "facts that by themselves or by their reasonable 6 inferences could cause a reasonable juror" to find each element of plaintiffs' claim.
7 O'Dee v. Tri-County Metropolitan Trans. Dist., 212 Or App 456, 460-61, 463, 157 P3d
8 1272 (2007); see Brant v. Tri-Met, 230 Or App 97, 103, 213 P3d 869 (2009) (on a 9 defendant's motion for summary judgment in a negligence case based on the standard of 10 care, "the question is whether [the] plaintiff produced sufficient evidence to allow a jury 11 to find that the [defendant] was negligent"); see also Hagler v. Coastal Farm Holdings, 12 Inc., 354 Or 132, 140, 144-47, 309 P3d 1073 (2013) (discussing a plaintiff's evidentiary 13 burden to avoid summary judgment in a negligence case).

14           Under Oregon law, a tavern owner that negligently serves alcohol to a 15 visibly intoxicated person may be liable for injuries to a third party resulting from the 16 visibly intoxicated person's violent conduct, if it was foreseeable to the tavern owner that 17 serving the person would create an unreasonable risk of violent conduct. Moore v. Willis, 18 307 Or 254, 767 P2d 62 (1988); Hawkins v. Conklin, 307 Or 262, 768 P2d 66 (1988); 19 Sparks v. Warren, 122 Or App 136, 856 P2d 337 (1993). "The fact that someone is 20 visibly intoxicated * * *, standing alone, does not make it foreseeable that serving alcohol 21 to the person creates an unreasonable risk that the person will become violent." Moore,

1 307 Or at 260.

2           Rather, to establish foreseeability, a plaintiff must first plead and then 3 prove specific facts--beyond the fact of visible intoxication--from which an objectively 4 reasonable factfinder could find or reasonably infer that the tavern owner who served the 5 visibly intoxicated person knew or had reason to know that serving that person created 6 the unreasonable risk that that person would become violent. See id. at 260-61 7 ("[b]ecause there [were] no allegations of facts from which a factfinder could infer that 8 [the particular] defendants had reason to know that serving alcohol to [the visibly 9 intoxicated persons at issue] would cause them to become violent," the plaintiff's 10 allegations were insufficient to establish foreseeability); Hawkins, 307 Or at 269 (the 11 plaintiff's allegations were insufficient to establish foreseeability where the plaintiff did 12 not allege facts showing "that the defendant knew about the [visibly intoxicated person's] 13 threats and unruly conduct or that the defendant otherwise had reason to know of [the 14 visibly intoxicated person's] violent propensities at the time the defendant served alcohol 15 to [the visibly intoxicated person]"); Sparks, 122 Or App at 139-40 (the plaintiff's 16 evidence was insufficient to establish foreseeability at the summary judgment stage of the 17 case where the plaintiff presented "no evidence" showing that the defendants knew or 18 should have known that if they negligently failed to prohibit consumption of alcohol by 19 minors, "underage drinkers or [the underage drinker at issue] would become violent").
20 As the Supreme Court recognized in Moore, a plaintiff can do that by proving facts 21 showing that a tavern owner's general observations and experiences "in the business of 1 serving alcohol" gave that tavern owner reason to know that violence would be a 2 foreseeable result of serving alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person. 307 Or at 260-61.

3 Alternatively, a plaintiff can establish foreseeability by proving facts showing that the 4 tavern owner knew or had reason to know that the visibly intoxicated person in question 5 had a propensity for violence that could be incited by further drinking. Hawkins, 307 Or 6 at 269.

7           Here, in opposing defendant's summary judgment motion, plaintiffs did not 8 present evidence that would permit a reasonable factfinder to find or infer the facts that 9 Moore requires. At this point, it is undisputed that defendant did not know or have 10 reason to know any specific facts about Mayfield that would make his violent conduct 11 foreseeable. Instead, plaintiffs' theory of foreseeability, as alleged in the complaint, is 12 that defendant had reason to know that serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated 13 created an unreasonable risk of violence "because those who are in the business of 14 serving alcohol know that visibly intoxicated drinkers frequently become violent." The 15 only evidence that plaintiffs submitted in support of that "reason-to-know" theory of 16 foreseeability consists of (1) a declaration from Dr. Brady--a medical doctor with 17 expertise in "alcohol physiology and effects"--stating that he could testify to "a degree of 18 reasonable medical certainty" to, among other things, the facts that "[i]ntoxicated drinkers 19 frequently become violent," and "[t]he link between visible intoxication and increased 20 levels of violence has been well-established in the medical, scientific, and lay literature

1 for decades, if not more than a century";<sup>2</sup> and (2) the deposition testimony of a bartender 2 from a different bar down the street that, when a bar patron becomes violent, "[t]hat's the 3 alcohol talking." But that evidence is insufficient to permit a rational factfinder to make 4 the finding that Moore requires--in this instance, a finding that defendant, by virtue of the 5 fact that it was in the business of serving alcohol, was on notice that serving a visibly 6 intoxicated person created an unreasonable risk that the person would become violent.
7 See, e.g., Stewart v. Kids Incorporated of Dallas, OR, 245 Or App 267, 283, 261 P3d
8 1272 (2011), rev dismissed as improvidently allowed, 353 Or 104 (2012) (equating 9 requirement that a plaintiff demonstrate that the defendant "knew or should have known" 10 of a risk of harm with a requirement that a plaintiff demonstrate that the defendant was on 11 notice of the risk of harm).

12                   Viewing the evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom in the light

<sup>2</sup> Although defendant argues otherwise, the transcript reflects that the trial court struck one sentence in the expert's declaration for lack of foundation. In that sentence, the expert opined, "Those who are in the business of serving alcohol know that visibly intoxicated persons frequently become violent." On appeal, the parties disagree both as to the scope of the trial court's evidentiary ruling and its correctness. Defendant argues that the entirety of the paragraph in the expert's declaration addressing the link between alcohol and violence was inadmissible; plaintiffs argue--in their reply brief only--that the trial court erred by striking that one sentence. However, neither party has assigned error to the trial court's evidentiary ruling in the manner required by our rules, ORAP 5.45 (governing assignments of error) and ORAP 5.57 (governing cross-assignments of error). For that reason, we decline to review the correctness of the trial court's ruling on the motion to strike, and review the trial court's ruling on summary judgment on a record that excludes the stricken portion of the expert's affidavit and includes the portions of the affidavit that were not stricken. See, e.g., State v. Drummond, 137 Or App 168, 173, 903 P2d 925 (1995) (declining to consider arguments regarding admissibility of evidence absent separate assignment of error addressing trial court's evidentiary ruling); Oregon Occupational Safety v. Marv's Utility, 128 Or App 204, 209, 875 P2d 531 (1994) (same, in agency context).

1 most favorable to plaintiffs, and resolving any conflicts in the evidence in favor of 2 plaintiffs, the following story emerges from the summary judgment record in this case:

- 3 • Prior to the night in question, defendant had served visibly intoxicated patrons.
- 4 • Prior to the night in question, defendant had not experienced any incidents of 5 violence involving persons to whom defendant served alcohol.
- 6 • Defendant's clientele consists of "low-key, very friendly people."
- 7 • Mayfield had not been to defendant prior to the night in question.
- 8 • Defendant served Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated.
- 9 • Medical professionals with expertise in alcohol physiology and effects have 10 recognized a link between intoxication and violence, and are aware that 11 "intoxicated drinkers frequently become violent."
- 12 • A variety of "medical, scientific, and lay literature" has long reported on "[t]he 13 link between visible intoxication and increased levels of violence."
- 14 • A bartender in a different bar down the street from defendant has observed that 15 violence occurs in his bar "once a month max" and that when it does, "[t]hat's the 16 alcohol talking."

17           Those facts do not show directly that defendant knew that serving alcohol 18 to Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk that he would 19 behave violently. Accordingly, under Moore, the question is whether it rationally can be 20 inferred from those facts that defendant should have known--that is, was on notice of the 21 fact--that serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created the unreasonable risk

1 that he would become violent. It cannot.

2           We have adopted the standard applied by the federal courts to determine 3 whether a particular inference is a reasonable one or is, instead, impermissible 4 speculation. See State v. Guckert, 260 Or App 50, 56, 316 P3d 373 (2013), rev den, 354
5 Or 840 (2014); State v. Bivins, 191 Or App 460, 467, 83 P3d 379 (2004). Under that 6 standard:

7           "The line between a reasonable inference that may permissibly be drawn by 8 a jury from basic facts in evidence and an impermissible speculation is not 9 drawn by judicial idiosyncrasies. The line is drawn by the laws of logic. If 10 there is an experience of logical probability that an ultimate fact will follow 11 a stated narrative or historical fact, then the jury is given the opportunity to 12 draw a conclusion because there is a reasonable probability that the 13 conclusion flows from the proven facts."

14 Bivins, 191 Or App at 467 (quoting Tose v. First Pennsylvania Bank, N.A., 648 F2d 879, 15 895 (3rd Cir), cert den, 454 US 893 (1981)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

16           Here, the conclusion that defendant should have known that serving 17 Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated would lead to the unreasonable risk that 18 Mayfield would act violently is not a rational inference because it does not follow, as a 19 matter of logical probability, from those facts that the summary judgment record 20 establishes. To reach that conclusion from those facts would require a factfinder to make 21 too many intermediate inferences and assumptions, none of which logically follows from 22 the facts established by the summary judgment record. See Bivins, 191 Or App at 468 23 (explaining that evidence is insufficient to support an inference if it "requires the stacking 24 of inferences to the point of speculation"). Specifically, a factfinder would have to infer

1 that (1) persons in the business of serving alcohol generally know what medical doctors 2 who are experts in alcohol physiology and effects know about the connection between 3 intoxication and violence; (2) the unspecified "medical, scientific, and lay literature" 4 documenting the connection between intoxication and violence is the type of literature 5 that would be read by persons in the business of selling alcohol;<sup>3</sup> and (3) the operations 6 and clientele of the bar where the other bartender observed a connection between 7 intoxication and violence were similar enough to the operations and clientele of bars 8 generally, or to the operations and clientele of defendant specifically, that that bartender's 9 experiences and observations can be generalized to defendant and/or other bars.

10                   On this record, those intermediate inferences represent guesswork. It is not 11 logical to assume that people in the business of selling alcohol know what medical 12 experts on alcohol physiology and effects know about the connection between alcohol 13 and violence, especially on a record like this one, where the uncontroverted evidence

<sup>3</sup> The dissent observes--correctly--that in the time since the Supreme Court decided Moore, the legislature has mandated an educational program for Oregon alcohol servers that has greatly increased awareness of the dangers of the overconsumption of alcohol. The dissent further observes that the Oregon Liquor Control Commission (OLCC) course addresses the link between "irresponsible drinking" and "violence and violent crime," as well as "specific techniques for cutting off intoxicated patrons in order to avoid fights." ___ Or App at ___ (Egan, J., dissenting) (slip op at 5-7). However, plaintiffs did not submit any evidence of the existence or content of that OLCC curriculum in this case. As a result, until the Supreme Court revisits its formulation of foreseeability in Moore in the light of the legislative changes identified by the dissent, the dissent's discussion of the content of that curriculum has no bearing on the issue that this case presents: whether plaintiffs' evidence was sufficient to establish that defendant knew or should have known that serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk that Mayfield would act violently.

1 shows that defendant did not previously have the opportunity to observe that connection
2 firsthand. It also is not logical to assume that the mere existence of unidentified literature 3 addressing the connection between alcohol and violence means that that literature is of 4 the ilk that people in the business of selling alcohol ordinarily would read--especially 5 when some of that literature is directed toward the fields of medicine and science, and the 6 rest is unidentified, leaving the factfinder to speculate about what that literature is and 7 who is likely to have read it. And it is not logical to assume that the experiences of one 8 bar necessarily generalize to other bars, absent evidence showing how that one bar's 9 operations and clientele are similar to those of other bars.

10           It may not have taken much additional evidence to convert those unfounded 11 assumptions into permissible inferences. However, plaintiffs did not supply that 12 evidence here, and we cannot supply it for them by speculating that such evidence might 13 exist. As a result, on this record, it cannot be found or reasonably inferred that defendant 14 knew, or had reason to know, from its experience or otherwise, that serving Mayfield 15 while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk that Mayfield would 16 become violent.

17           The dissent reaches a different conclusion. In so doing, the dissent errs in 18 three respects. First, the dissent errs to the extent that it implies that because Moore 19 addressed what facts a plaintiff must plead in order to establish foreseeability in a case 20 like this one, the standard for foreseeability established by Moore does not apply at the 21 summary judgment stage of the case. ___ Or App at ___ (Egan, J., dissenting) (slip op at 1 13-14). But if a plaintiff must plead certain facts in order to sufficiently allege 2 foreseeability so as to state a claim for relief, the plaintiff ultimately must prove those 3 facts in order to establish foreseeability. The facts required to state a claim for relief are 4 the facts that must be proved to obtain relief. See Davis v. Tyee Industries, Inc., 295 Or 5 467, 479, 668 P2d 1186 (1983) (under ORCP 18 A, "whatever the theory of recovery, 6 facts must be alleged which, if proved, will establish the right to recover" (emphasis 7 added)); Moore, 307 Or at 259 n 7 (same; quoting Davis, 295 Or at 479). And if a 8 plaintiff must prove particular facts at trial to establish foreseeability, the plaintiff must, 9 at the summary judgment stage of the case, come forward with sufficient evidence to 10 permit a jury to find those particular facts in order to avoid summary judgment. See 11 O'Dee, 212 Or App at 460-61. That means that, to avoid summary judgment in this case, 12 plaintiffs were required to present sufficient evidence to permit a jury to find specific 13 facts demonstrating that defendant knew or was on notice of the fact that serving alcohol 14 to Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk of violence.

15 Given the allegations in the complaint, plaintiffs were required to put on evidence 16 sufficient to permit a jury to find that defendant was on notice that serving Mayfield 17 while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk of violence by virtue of the 18 fact that defendant was in the business of selling alcohol. Plaintiffs did not do so.

19           Next, the dissent invokes the principle that questions of foreseeability 20 "ordinarily" are jury questions, unless a case involves the "outer margins of debatable 21 conduct," and argues that we are erroneously disregarding that principle. ___ Or App at 1 ____ (Egan, J., dissenting) (slip op at 16) (quoting Fazzolari v. Portland School Dist. No.

2 IJ, 303 Or 1, 12, 734 P2d 1326 (1987)). But that principle--that foreseeability questions
3 ordinarily present jury questions--is not a rule of law, it is a rule of thumb. Moreover, it 4 is a rule of thumb that affords the least guidance where, as here, the Supreme Court has 5 articulated with some precision what facts a plaintiff must prove in order to establish 6 foreseeability. In those instances in which the Supreme Court has identified what facts 7 must be proved in order to establish foreseeability, a court's role in reviewing a grant of 8 summary judgment is to assess whether the evidence presented by the plaintiff is legally 9 sufficient to permit a factfinder to find those facts that the Supreme Court has said must 10 be found. See Buchler v. Oregon Corrections Div., 316 Or 499, 509, 853 P2d 798 (1993) 11 (court's role is to "determine[ ] as a matter of law whether the facts alleged or the 12 evidence of them is sufficient to support relief"). That is what we did previously in 13 Sparks, and that is what we have done here. See 122 Or App at 139-40 (affirming grant 14 of summary judgment to the defendant fraternity because the plaintiff, who alleged that 15 he was assaulted by an underage, intoxicated member, "did not present evidence 16 sufficient to create an inference that [the] defendant's conduct created a foreseeable risk 17 of the kind of injury that occurred," as required by Moore).

18           Finally, the dissent asserts that the evidence presented by plaintiffs is 19 sufficient to create a factual issue on foreseeability and suggests that we have reached a 20 contrary result by impermissibly "elevat[ing] plaintiffs' burden." ____ Or App at ____ 21 (Egan, J., dissenting) (slip op at 11). But we have not elevated plaintiffs' burden; we

1 have assessed whether the evidence is legally sufficient to permit a jury to find the 2 particular facts that Moore says must be found. That is our charge on review of a grant of 3 a motion for summary judgment. Buchler, 316 Or at 509; O'Dee, 212 Or App at 460-61.
4 And, as explained above, on this sparse evidentiary record, the conclusion that defendant 5 was on notice that serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created an 6 unreasonable risk of violence would be nothing more than a guess. As a result, plaintiffs' 7 evidence was insufficient to establish that defendant knew or should have known that 8 serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated created an unreasonable risk that 9 Mayfield would act violently, and the trial court correctly granted summary judgment to 10 defendant.

11 Affirmed.

1           EGAN, J., dissenting.

2           The majority concludes that the trial court did not err in granting summary 3 judgment to defendant because plaintiffs had not presented evidence sufficient to create a 4 factual dispute that Mayfield's violent acts were the foreseeable result of defendant's 5 service of alcohol to Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated. ___ Or App at ___ (slip 6 op at 1). Because I disagree that summary judgment was appropriate, I dissent.

7           To frame my dispute with the majority's conclusion, I set forth the relevant 8 legal history, framework, and social context. In 1987, the Oregon Supreme Court 9 clarified the negligence standard in Oregon in Fazzolari v. Portland School Dist. No. 1J, 10 303 Or 1, 17, 734 P2d 1326 (1987):

11           "[U]nless the parties invoke a status, a relationship, or a particular standard 12 of conduct that creates, defines, or limits the defendant's duty, the issue of 13 liability for harm actually resulting from [the] defendant's conduct properly 14 depends on whether that conduct unreasonably created a foreseeable risk to 15 a protected interest of the kind of harm that befell the plaintiff."

16 In describing negligence in terms of "foreseeability" rather than in terms of "duty" or "no 17 duty," the court described how the law provides limits on when one individual might 18 expect to hold another individual liable for harms suffered by the first. The concept of 19 "foreseeability" refers to the "generalized risks of the type of incidents and injuries that 20 occurred rather than predictability of the actual sequence of events." Id. at 21 (emphasis 21 added); see also Buchler v. Oregon Corrections Div., 316 Or 499, 509, 853 P2d 798 22 (1993) (discussing Fazzolari).

1                   A year after Fazzolari, the Supreme Court decided Moore v. Willis, 307 Or 2 254, 767 P2d 62 (1988), and Hawkins v. Conklin, 307 Or 262, 767 P2d 66 (1988), on the 3 same day. In Moore, the defendants, the owners of two taverns, served alcohol to (and 4 then one called a taxi for) two customers, each of whom was visibly intoxicated. The 5 customers left the tavern in the taxi and killed the taxi driver, Moore, while struggling 6 over a gun. The trial court granted the defendants' ORCP 21 B motion for judgment on 7 the pleadings. On review, the Oregon Supreme Court delineated what facts a plaintiff 8 must set forth to sufficiently allege the element of foreseeability and state a claim for 9 negligence and concluded that the complaint in Moore was insufficient. The plaintiff had 10 alleged that the tavern owners "were negligent [in serving alcohol to the visibly 11 intoxicated customers], and their negligence was the proximate cause of [Moore's] 12 death." Id. at 257. The court stated:

13                   "It may be common for intoxicated and underage drinkers to become 14 violent. * * * At the pleading stage, however, a court cannot simply assume 15 that it is common for intoxicated or underage drinkers to become violent in 16 order to support an inference that violence is a foreseeable result of serving 17 alcohol to someone who is intoxicated. * * * In conclusion, [when a 18 plaintiff claims that a risk was foreseeable,] we hold that the complaint 19 must allege facts that would allow the factfinder to determine that the 20 defendants should have known of the danger to others."

21 Moore, 307 Or at 260-61 (internal citations omitted; emphasis added).

22                   In Hawkins, a case with a similar factual basis involving the service of 23 alcohol to visibly intoxicated persons who later acted violently, the Oregon Supreme 24 Court determined that the "plaintiff failed to allege foreseeability[,]" because the 25 complaint lacked allegations that the defendant had any knowledge or reason to know

1 that the intoxicated customer had acted violently or that, if the defendant had been 2 negligent as alleged--by serving a visibly intoxicated customer alcohol--the defendant 3 then knew or should have known of the risk of violence to others without also having 4 knowledge of the customer's violent or threatening behaviors. Hawkins, 307 Or at 269 5 (emphasis added).

6           Several years later, we applied those principles in different procedural 7 postures and factual contexts. In Sparks v. Warren, 122 Or App 136, 856 P2d 337 8 (1993), the plaintiff brought a negligence claim for injuries he sustained when one of the 9 defendants, an underage fraternity member, assaulted him after consuming alcohol. We 10 affirmed the trial court's summary judgment ruling in the defendants' favor, concluding 11 that, because the plaintiff had presented no evidence on the element of foreseeability to 12 create a genuine issue of material fact, the plaintiff's evidence could not as a matter of 13 law result in an inference connecting the defendant's misconduct to the creation of a 14 foreseeable risk of violence. Sparks, 122 Or App at 139-40.

15           More recently, in Stewart v. Kids Incorporated of Dallas, OR, 245 Or App 16 267, 261 P3d 1272 (2011), rev dismissed as improvidently allowed, 354 Or 104 (2012), in 17 an action for negligence brought after a 13-year-old girl was sexually assaulted at a 18 fundraiser put on by one of the defendants, we affirmed the trial court's grant of the 19 defendants' ORCP 21 A(8) motion to dismiss. The plaintiff had alleged that the 20 defendants should have known that a "reasonable probability" existed that "sexual 21 predators would come to the [fundraiser] to harm children * * * because teenage girls

1 were participating * * *, the [fundraiser] was advertised, and sexual predators might have 2 had contact with teenage girls participating in the [fundraiser]." Id. at 269-70. We 3 rejected the plaintiff's generic allegations of foreseeability, and continued to apply 4 Moore's principles relating to the foreseeability element of negligence claims. Stewart, 5 245 Or App at 286. Thus, our recent precedents still require that plaintiffs allege some 6 specific facts--above and beyond that of visible intoxication and everyday knowledge-- 7 that supports an inference that the defendant knew or had reason to know of the danger to 8 others. Stewart, 245 Or App at 286; Moore, 307 Or at 260-61.

9           While Moore and Hawkins were working through the courts, the legislature 10 enacted Oregon's mandatory alcohol server education program. The Oregon Liquor 11 Control Commission (OLCC) established its education program in 1987, with an aim 12 toward reducing and preventing alcohol-related issues and increasing awareness relating 13 to Oregon alcohol laws, responsible alcohol-service strategies, and problems associated 14 with alcohol abuse. OLCC, Alcohol Server Education Course, 1-2 (2013), available at 15 http://www.oregon.gov/olcc/docs/publications/alcohol\_server\_education\_course.pdf
16 (last modified March 2013) (Fact Sheet). As a result of this first-in-the-nation mandatory 17 program, Oregon professional alcohol servers' understanding of the risks and effects of 18 the overconsumption of alcohol has by legislative directive evolved significantly.

19           The Supreme Court decided Moore and Hawkins in 1988--the endpoint of 20 Oregon's era of oblivion to the dangers of the overconsumption of alcohol. In the years 21 since those cases were decided, the expansion of awareness regarding the toxic

1 consequences of the overconsumption of alcohol has been immense. The Oregon
2 Supreme Court's conclusion in Moore that "[t]he fact that someone is visibly intoxicated 3 * * *, standing alone, does not make it foreseeable that serving alcohol to the person 4 creates an unreasonable risk that the person will become violent," 307 Or at 260, cannot 5 be reconciled with the knowledge and current environment relating to alcohol.

6           Oregon's statutorily mandated alcohol server education program is based on 7 the concept that people who serve alcohol professionally can be a "positive force in 8 reducing alcohol-related problems and enhancing public health and safety." Fact Sheet at 9 1. Servers receive education regarding alcohol as a drug and its effects on the body, 10 behavior, and driving ability; the effects of alcohol in combination with commonly-used 11 legal (prescription or nonprescription) drugs and illegal drugs; state alcohol beverage 12 laws, such as the prohibition of sale to minors and intoxicated persons, sale for on- or off-13 premises consumption, hours of operation, penalties for violation of those laws, drunk-14 driving laws, and liquor liability statutes; alcoholism and community treatment programs 15 and agencies; standard operating procedures for dealing with customers, including 16 intervention with difficult and belligerent customers and ways to cut off service and deal 17 with those customers; alternative means of transportation to get the customer safely 18 home; and advertising and marketing for safe and responsible drinking patterns. ORS 19 471.542(5).

20           In the course of that education, servers also learn that irresponsible drinking 21 leads to an array of damages, problems, and societal costs, including violence and violent

1 crime. As the workbook for the Academy of Training and Prevention<sup>1</sup> illustrates, servers 2 learn that alcohol consumption:

- 3 • "[I]s a major factor in crashes, drowning, industrial accidents, and serious crimes 4 including murder, suicide, assault, rape and domestic abuse."
- 5 • "[I]mpairs the thoughts and actions of the drinker" and, when consumed in excess, 6 "may alter judgment."
- 7 • Can cause violence by "lowering inhibitions in people with a tendency to 8 violence."

13 injuries, damages, societal problems, and costs resulting from the misuse of alcohol" and 14 are in "a position of public trust to dispense a drug that * * * can have deadly results 15 when used inappropriately." Id. at ATP 5.

<sup>1</sup> The OLCC maintains a list of certified training providers on its website. The Academy of Training and Prevention is one of those providers. See OLCC, Server Education Trainers (Providers), available at http://www.oregon.gov/olcc/docs/service\_permits\_and\_server\_ed/provider\_list\_3\_2014.pdf (last modified March 25, 2014). To be certified, a training provider must, among other things, have a course that meets the OLCC's minimum curriculum standards and a workbook "that meets the [OLCC's] Minimum Workbook Standards." 1 intoxicated patrons in order to avoid fights and how to "keep control of the situation even 2 though an intoxicated customer may be hostile, threatening, and irrational." Id. at ATP 3 49. Servers are also educated on Oregon's liquor liability laws, including the fact that 4 they may be liable for "deaths, injuries, and damages caused by intoxicated persons even 5 when an automobile crash is not involved." Id. at ATP 59. As a result of this statutorily-6 mandated training, servers today are well aware of the dangers of overconsumption of 7 alcohol. According to the OLCC:

8            "This training has increased alcohol servers' awareness of problems 9            associated with alcohol abuse and gives servers the information and skills 10            they need to sell alcohol responsibly. Trained, professional servers have 11            learned to deny service to minors and to visibly intoxicated persons. As a 12            result, the vast majority of OLCC-licensed businesses sell alcohol safely 13            and responsibly and do not create problems for their patrons or 14            communities."

15 Fact Sheet at 2.

16            Given the legislature's express recognition of the dangers connected to the 17 overconsumption of alcohol, including, specifically, the risk of the "aggressive" or 18 "belligerent" customer, and the enlightenment of Oregon's servers in the decades since 19 Moore that has transpired as a result, it is fair to say that, in Oregon today, the fact that 20 someone is visibly intoxicated ordinarily will make it foreseeable to a professional 21 alcohol server that serving that person more alcohol creates an unreasonable risk that that 22 person will become violent. As a result, proof of the fact that a person was visibly 23 intoxicated at the time a server served that person another drink ordinarily should be 24 sufficient to create a jury question as to whether any subsequent violent conduct by the

1 visibly intoxicated person was foreseeable to the server. Further, evidence such as that 2 presented by plaintiff, showing a link between alcohol and violence, commonly serves to 3 corroborate and buttress the evidence that the person was visibly intoxicated, creating an 4 issue of fact concerning whether that person's acts were foreseeable to the server.
5 Although that fact may not compel the conclusion that violence was foreseeable, it, at a 6 minimum, is sufficient to submit the issue of foreseeability to the jury in a case like this 7 one, where there is no reason to think that defendant's statutorily mandated training did 8 not put it on notice that the resulting harm was one of the many predictable (and 9 legislatively anticipated) consequences of the over-service of alcohol and excess alcohol 10 consumption. The legislature long ago recognized that violence is a predictable harm 11 associated with the overconsumption of alcohol. As a result of that legislative 12 recognition, servers are aware of that predictable harm as well. It is time for the law to 13 catch up.

14           Because the law has not yet done so, I do not dispute the applicability of 15 Moore's basic principles to this case; however, I believe that the majority improperly 16 applies those principles. Based on the facts alleged and the evidence presented, I would 17 conclude that plaintiffs' evidence created a genuine issue of material fact under Moore's 18 principles as currently applied.

19           Plaintiffs alleged that 20           "[i]ntoxicated drinkers frequently become violent. Defendant * * *, 21           which was in the business of serving alcohol, had reason to know that 22           Mayfield would become violent, because those who are in the business of 1           serving alcohol know that visibly intoxicated drinkers frequently become 2           violent."

3   Thus, plaintiff met Moore's basic pleading requirements by alleging more than just 4   Mayfield's visible intoxication. Defendant, in its motion for summary judgment, asserted 5   that there was "no evidence that Mayfield's off-premises criminal assault was reasonably 6   foreseeable--a prerequisite to stating a claim for relief against a commercial alcohol 7   provider under Oregon law." (Emphasis added.) In opposing defendant's summary 8   judgment motion, plaintiffs presented evidence on the issue of foreseeability in the form 9   of Dr. Brady's declaration and an excerpt of the bartender's deposition transcript.

10           Brady's declaration, excluding the stricken sentence, was admissible 11   evidence that Mayfield was visibly intoxicated at the time he drank his last two to three 12   drinks at defendant's bar. Based on the blood alcohol content (BAC) extrapolated by 13   Brady, which was between 0.200 percent and 0.250 percent at the time Mayfield left 14   defendant's bar, Brady opined that Mayfield would not only have been visibly 15   intoxicated, but would have had impaired judgment and would have been unable to 16   employ reasonable decision-making skills, and, like others who have consumed similar 17   quantities of alcohol, would have lacked normal judgment and self-control. Brady also 18   opined that "intoxicated drinkers frequently become violent. * * * The link between 19   visible intoxication and increased levels of violence has been well-established in the 20   medical, scientific, and lay literature for decades, if not more than a century." The 21   declaration also noted that Brady was "prepared to testify to the opinions set forth 22   herein."

1                   Plaintiffs also submitted the following colloquy linking alcohol and 2 violence from a portion of the bartender's deposition testimony:

3                   "[Attorney]: And when you say a tremendous amount of traffic, can 4 you quantify that for us? I mean, you say it's everyday you've got 5 [methamphetamine users] in the bar.

6                   "[Bartender]: Yeah.

7                   "[Attorney]: Violence in the bar as well associated with the 8 [methamphetamine users]?"

9                   "[Bartender]: No, not the [methamphetamine users]. That's what 10 alcohol is for.

11                  "[Attorney]: That's the alcohol?"

12                  "[Bartender]: That's the alcohol talking.

13                  "[Attorney]: How frequently do you have some disruptive violent 14 behavior going on?"

15                  "[Bartender]: I'd say maybe once a month max, something like 16 that."

17 The bartender testified that he worked at a bar within walking distance of defendant's bar 18 and that he had been trained to evaluate whether a patron has had too much to drink in 19 order to determine whether to serve that patron alcohol. The bartender went on to state 20 that he had made a similar evaluation of Mayfield on the night of the shooting and 21 declined to serve him. The bartender also testified that defendant's typical patrons 22 generally consisted of an aging population, but that he had been in that bar multiple times 23 in the past several years and had seen visibly intoxicated patrons in that bar. He further 24 noted that, on occasion, patrons from defendant's bar had come to his bar after 25 defendant's bar had closed for the evening.

1           That admissible evidence specifically addressed the issue raised in 2 defendant's motion for summary judgment, i.e., foreseeability. The majority concludes 3 that that evidence "is insufficient to permit a rational factfinder to make the finding that 4 Moore requires." ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 5).

5           The majority's conclusion that plaintiffs' evidence does not create a genuine 6 issue of material fact is incorrect. The majority appears to incorrectly elevate plaintiffs' 7 burden in responding to that motion for summary judgment. In doing so, the majority 8 also disregards the general--and longstanding--rule that foreseeability questions are 9 typically jury questions.

10           The majority incorrectly elevates plaintiffs' burden in responding to the 11 motion for summary judgment by requiring that plaintiffs submit additional evidence.
12 As to Brady's declaration, the majority reasons that, to create a factual issue, plaintiffs 13 had to supplement the evidence that plaintiffs had already presented; that is, without 14 "additional evidence," the majority concludes that plaintiffs' evidence would not permit a 15 reasonable factfinder to infer that defendant knew or had reason to know that violence 16 would be a foreseeable result of serving alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person, i.e., 17 Mayfield. ___ Or App at ___ , ___, ___ n 3, ___ (slip op at 2, 3, 8 n 3, 9). The majority 18 finally states that

19           "[i]t may not have taken much additional evidence to convert those 20 unfounded assumptions into permissible inferences. However, plaintiffs 21 did not supply that evidence here, and we cannot supply it for them by 22 speculating that such evidence might exist."

23 ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 9) (emphasis added).

1           By breaking down the evidence presented into individual pieces, instead of 2 looking at the sum of the evidence on the issue of foreseeability, and then delving into a 3 discussion of the "stacking of [permissible] inferences," the majority's reasoning misses 4 the forest for the trees. It concludes that no reasonable mind could infer that defendant 5 should have known that serving Mayfield while he was visibly intoxicated would lead to 6 Mayfield's violent acts. ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 7-8). That conclusion is based on 7 reductionism in its most patent form and excludes, in my view, several key points that 8 can be drawn from plaintiffs' evidence, which I have drawn out above. Those points lead 9 to other, reasonable inferences that the majority disregards (such as that a person in the 10 business of serving alcohol would know that a connection exists between the 11 consumption of alcohol and violence, or that, because Mayfield was highly intoxicated 12 after over-consuming alcohol--to the point that his judgment and self-control was 13 impaired--he would, like others who consume too much alcohol, act in an unreasonable 14 manner and create unreasonable risks).

15           The majority goes on to conclude that "the only evidence that plaintiffs 16 submitted in support of that 'reason to know' theory of foreseeability" consisted of 17 Brady's declaration--setting forth facts that he, a medical doctor with expertise in "alcohol 18 physiology," could testify, "to a degree of reasonable medical certainty," that 19 "[i]ntoxicated drinkers frequently become violent" and that "medical, scientific, and lay 20 literature" has established "the link between visible intoxication and increased levels of 21 violence"--and the deposition testimony of the bartender that, in his experience, when a

1 bar patron becomes violent, it is due to the influence of alcohol. ___ Or App at ___ (slip 2 op at 4-5) (emphasis added). The majority then states that it would be "guesswork" to 3 infer that "the unspecified 'medical, scientific, and lay literature'" documenting the 4 connection between intoxication and violence is the type of literature "that would be read 5 by persons in the business of selling alcohol." ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 9). At this 6 stage in the litigation, the absence of reference to a specific, identifiable piece of 7 literature in Brady's declaration is not fatal to the question whether the jury could infer 8 that defendant's conduct created a risk of violence based on the evidence presented, nor 9 does it compel a judgment for defendant. See generally Jones v. General Motors Corp., 10 325 Or 404, 413-14, 939 P2d 608 (1997) (Under ORCP 47 C, no genuine issue as to a 11 material fact exists if, based upon the record before the court viewed in a manner most 12 favorable to the adverse party, "no objectively reasonable juror could return a verdict for 13 the adverse party," which means that "summary judgment is appropriate only if the * * * 14 facts would compel a jury to return a verdict for the moving party." (Quoting ORCP 47 15 C; emphasis added.)). In requiring additional evidence, the majority erroneously elevates 16 the standard required by Moore and ORCP 47 C.

17           In this case, unlike in Moore, Hawkins, and Stewart, the question arises in 18 relation to a motion for summary judgment pursuant to ORCP 47 C. "[U]nder ORCP 47 19 C, the party opposing summary judgment has the burden of producing evidence on any 20 issue 'raised in the motion' as to which the adverse party would have the burden of 21 persuasion at trial." Two Two v. Fujitec America, Inc., 355 Or 319, 324, ___ P3d ___

1 (2014) (emphasis added). Because defendant "raised in the motion" the issue of 2 foreseeability, and plaintiffs "had the burden of persuasion on that issue at trial," 3 plaintiffs therefore were required, under ORCP 47 C, "to produce evidence on the issue 4 of [foreseeability] to defeat summary judgment." Id. at 324 (emphasis added). The 5 majority conflates that minimal burden with plaintiffs' eventual burden of persuasion at 6 trial<sup>2</sup> (that it no doubt would have had, had the action survived that long).<sup>3</sup>

7           Plaintiffs discharged that burden. And although I acknowledge that 8 plaintiffs are relying on a slim evidentiary reed, contrary to the majority, I would neither 9 hold that the evidence, as a matter of law, does not create a genuine issue of material fact 10 nor that, at this stage in the litigation, additional evidence is required to demonstrate that

<sup>2</sup> OEC 305 states that "[a] party has the burden of persuasion as to each fact the existence or nonexistence of which the law declares essential to the claim for relief or defense the party is asserting."

The burden of persuasion, as described in OEC 305 "summarizes the obligation of a party to convince the trier of fact that the party's assertion about an essential fact is true. If that party does not establish the truth of that essential fact in the mind of the factfinder by the requisite standard of proof, then the factfinder cannot find that the fact exists. * * * * * The burden of persuasion is, in essence, a method of breaking ties regarding disputed factual questions." State v. James, 339 Or 476, 487, 123 P3d 251 (2005) (emphasis added).

<sup>3</sup> By determining that plaintiffs' affirmative evidentiary showing was insufficient to show that issues of fact existed because plaintiffs would have had the trial burden as to the issue of foreseeability, the majority forgets that "[t]he record on summary judgment is viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. This is true even as to those issues upon which the opposing party would have the trial burden." Jones, 325 Or at 420 (emphasis in Jones); see also Hampton Tree Farms, Inc. v. Jewett, 320 Or 599, 613, 892 P2d 683 (1995) (at the summary judgment stage, the moving party has the burden to establish that there are no genuine issues of material fact, "even though [the adverse party] would have had the burden of establishing its claims at the time of trial").

1 a genuine issue of material fact exists in order for the fact question to reach a jury.

2           The proper question is whether plaintiff produced admissible evidence on 3 the issue of foreseeability--i.e., that "defendant's conduct caused a 'foreseeable risk * * *
4 of the kind of harm that befell the plaintiff[s]," Fazzolari, 303 Or at 17--so as to create a 5 "triable issue," or rather, so as to demonstrate that a genuine issue of material fact exists 6 such that plaintiffs are entitled to a jury determination of that fact. ORCP 47 C; see also 7 Jones, 325 Or at 413; Doyle v. City of Medford, 256 Or App 625, 650, 303 P3d 346, rev
8 allowed, 354 Or 386 (2013); Wilson v. Wilson, 224 Or App 360, 364, 197 P3d 1141
9 (2008), rev den, 346 Or 258 (2009) (citing Davis v. County of Clackamas, 205 Or App
10 387, 393-94, 134 P3d 1090, rev den, 341 Or 244 (2006), for the proposition that ORCP 11 47 C gives the adverse party the "burden of producing [admissible] evidence on any issue 12 raised in the motion as to which the adverse party would have the burden of persuasion at 13 trial"); O'Dee v. Tri-County Metropolitan Trans. Dist., 212 Or App 456, 461, 157 P3d 14 1272 (2007) (discussing burden of producing evidence, meaning that plaintiff had to 15 "come forward with specific facts demonstrating a genuine issue for trial"). The answer 16 to that question is yes.

17           Thus, by requiring that plaintiffs present additional facts to demonstrate a 18 factual issue for purposes of opposing the summary judgment motion, the majority has 19 elevated the standard of what the adverse party is required to present at the summary 20 judgment stage. See Forest Grove Brick v. Strickland, 277 Or 81, 87, 559 P2d 502 21 (1977) ("It is not the function of this court on review to decide issues of fact but solely to 1 determine if there is an issue of fact to be tried."). Under the majority's analysis, the only 2 means by which plaintiffs could show foreseeability would be a demonstration that that 3 particular defendant knew about the particular individual's propensity for violence or that 4 all defendants had such knowledge. Both of these showings are an anathema to the 5 concept of reasonable foreseeability as articulated in Moore.

6           Thus, I would hold that, by presenting affirmative evidence relating to 7 foreseeability, plaintiffs showed that a factual issue existed. I would conclude that a 8 reasonable juror could infer that the risk of harm was foreseeable if defendant acted 9 negligently (as alleged, by serving Mayfield when he was visibly intoxicated) based on 10 the inference that defendant, a business that serves alcohol, would frequently have the 11 opportunity to observe the reactions of people who consume alcohol, including, but not 12 limited to its typical patrons, and would have reason to know that a person who consumes 13 alcohol in excess may respond with violent behaviors. Sparks, 122 Or App at 140.

14           That leads me to my next point. The majority erroneously disregards the 15 general rule that foreseeability questions are typically jury questions. Fazzolari, 303 Or 16 at 12 (questions of foreseeability "ordinarily can be left to the jury, although at the outer 17 margins of debatable conduct a court is obliged to say that the conduct does or does not 18 meet the standard") (internal quotation marks omitted).

19           That principle did not begin with Fazzolari;<sup>4</sup> rather, it was in longstanding

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., Donaca v. Curry Co., 303 Or 30, 38, 734 P2d 1339 (1987); Stewart v. Jefferson Plywood Co., 255 Or 603, 607-08, 469 P2d 783 (1970) (stating principle); Kirby v. Sonville, 286 Or 339, 347, 594 P2d 818 (1979); Katter v. Jack's Datsun Sales,

1 use in our jurisprudence and continues to play an important role.<sup>5</sup> The majority 2 concludes that this "rule of thumb" "affords the least guidance where, as here, the 3 Supreme Court has articulated with some precision what a plaintiff must prove in order to 4 establish foreseeability." ___ Or App at ___ (slip op at 11) (emphasis added). It is 5 improper to disregard that longstanding principle when the circumstances of the case are 6 not at the "outer margins of debatable conduct." Moore, 307 Or at 254; Hawkins, 307 Or 7 at 262; Sparks, 122 Or App at 136. This case is not so extreme that the circumstances 8 dictate that the foreseeability issue should not be presented to the jury. See McPherson v.

In Buchler, the Oregon Supreme Court stated:

"[As discussed in Fazzolari,] '[d]uty' and 'foreseeability' are each but verbal tools used in explanatory reasoning to answer the legal question, 'Should defendant pay for plaintiff's harm?' In either formulation, the use to which courts and litigants put the question remains the same. When tested before trial, do the allegations of a complaint state facts that, under the law, will allow plaintiff to recover from the named defendant? When tested after a trial, does the evidence introduced reasonably permit findings of fact on which the law will allow the plaintiff to recover from the defendant? Either formulation--duty or foreseeability--is a method of describing how

1 Under Moore and Hawkins, plaintiffs' allegations were adequate. Further, 2 plaintiffs' evidence submitted in response to a motion for summary judgment 3 demonstrated that a genuine issue of material fact exists and that this case is not an 4 "extreme case" at the "outer margins" or "outside [the] limits" of circumstances or 5 conditions under which one member of society may expect another to pay for a harm 6 suffered.

7 And, in point of fact, the case on which the majority relies, Buchler is 8 instructive. In that case, a convicted car thief with no known history of violent conduct 9 escaped from prison. 316 Or at 502. Two days later, and over 50 miles away, the 10 escaped prisoner shot two people, killing one and injuring the other. Id. As to the 11 question of foreseeability, the Supreme Court concluded that that factual scenario was 12 "outside th[e] limits" and concluded that, "[a]s a matter of law, the harm that actually 13 occurred did not result from any risk of harm to others that was unreasonably created by 14 leaving the keys in the van [which facilitated the prisoner's escape]; summary judgment 15 was appropriate for that factual allegation of negligence." Id. at 514.

the law limits the circumstances or conditions under which one member of society may expect another to pay for a harm suffered. Within those limits, the jury or other factfinder may determine whether to award damages and in what amount. Outside those limits, the judge determines as a matter of law whether the facts alleged or the evidence of them is sufficient to support relief."

1 intoxicated, with an estimated BAC between 0.200 percent and 0.250 percent, when he 2 left defendant's bar, walked a short way up the street, was unsuccessful in getting other 3 bartenders at nearby bars to serve him alcohol, and then shot and injured plaintiffs. As 4 noted by my prior recitation of case law, such incidents are not uncommon, nor 5 "extreme." Indeed, the circumstances of this case are fairly representative of the facts 6 common to the cases dealing with over-consumption of alcohol and violence. Therefore, 7 the factual questions that exist in this case should be decided by a jury, as our precedents 8 have clearly dictated. See, e.g., Moore, 307 Or at 257; Hawkins, 307 Or at 269; Sparks,
